

Face to Face With Great Musicians (Classic Reprint)

Land of the beyond, the immortals of music doubtless have gathered together there some time since, and come to some conclusion about this, their self-appointed latter-day Boswell. I have seen them if it is possible to see a man in his works, in his letters, in his memoirs, in his biographies, in his portraits, and in the comments of his enemies and friends. Each name in the whole history of music conjures up for me a living personality, with whom I may in the silences of solitude, converse in no mistakable manner. It is no dead, empty-sounding word for me to see the name of a composer on a program; each number that is to be heard is a key which unlocks for me a stage on which is reenacted a scene from the drama of a mans life. In these little meetings face to face with great musicians, I have tried to make it possible for the most unlearned novice in music to enter the inner circle of musical creators and interpreters.
