

All Human Wisdom & Enlightenment is about Following Your True Nature Without Being Evil

The eleven books where I examine almost everything the world presents as wisdom through philosophy, psychology, psychiatry, self-help, religion, pop culture entertainment, literature and supposedly wise quotes by alleged famous people then show that they're all, at the most, mild inspiration next to what you feel in your true nature which is where you should find your natural intuitive standard of life and have the guts to live by it are as follows:

Book 1. Know Your Natural Intuition, Try to be Inspired All the Time Book 2. The Self-Help/ New Age Industry all in One Book Book 3. Inspired One-Liners Book 4. The Dark Side of the Soul Book 5. Crave Happiness Book 6. Prosperity-Success-Make Money-Get Rich Book 7. Wise Sayings 1 (Love, Money, Aging) Book 8. Wise Sayings (Health) Book 9. American Dream vs. your Soul Book 10. Christian Wisdom Book 11. Friendship Guide

I feel I'm an enlightened man because I follow my own standard in life away from everything I was ever brainwashed by. My central thesis is that you have a true nature that you're born with. If you live to honor it by releasing your natural energy all the time, you feel good. If you're not aware that you have a pure true nature and follow the artificial values of the world, you are betraying who you were naturally born to be. This unused energy builds up inside of you causing misery and depression. This is the unsung tragedy of life that afflicts many people in modern Western Society. I made the big leap when I realized society is screwed, not me. The greatest way I can possibly live my life is to follow my true nature in all its facets even if it goes against all the traditions of happiness and success I was brought up to believe in like pursue a regular career, get a mortgage, get married, have kids, be a mild-mannered, pacified guy who drinks beer, watches sports on TV and plays video games. I took the journey to discover who I was born to be free and clear. Most people think they take that journey but picking a major in college is not really freedom or taking any risk to discover who you really are because you are still living in that box of mainstream, Establishment society, playing by their rules, not yours. College is still a pacified, spoonfed place where you learn canned knowledge in a neat package but never learn anything about examining your own life freely away from societys knowledge. They should teach self-analysis in college. The bottom line is to pay your own way. It takes guts to believe in yourself enough to say youre gonna explore your life until you figure out a good way to earn a living close to your natural interests as opposed to conforming to some generic job within society. The world is hard. Inspired, original people have to convince conventional people their ideas, products and services are good in order to be successful which usually means a lot of rejection, at least at first but many artists and inventors push on no matter what. If you take on a safe career in any field but feel like you were born to do something else, like there is some unique unused energy inside of you wanting to get out but you dont know exactly what it is, youll have a gnawing feeling of emptiness like you missed something or are currently missing out on something until you live by your true nature. I quit teaching and lived like a pauper in order to have the free time to do whatever I wanted to do within my budget. Over time, I gravitated to the few things I really, really liked to do. I discovered that I have a natural standard already inside of me on how to live my life. It was there when I was born. I was already doing those things at the age of five then I got brainwashed by the world and followed its ideas of happiness and success until I was about 28 when I realized I have two main inspired interests which is what I dedicate my life to: Physical activities Creative-intellectual pursuits
