

The Literature of Music (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Literature of Music
The familiar description of Jubal in the book of Genesis as the father of all such as handle the harp and organ is the earliest mention in literature of the art of Music, and many other references in the Bible, chiefly in the Old Testament, will be familiar to every reader. It will not be supposed that the translations of the names of the different instruments can be accepted as more than approximations. At the time the Authorised Version was made no adequate knowledge of the subject existed, and in many cases no exact equivalent was to be found among the instruments then in use. About the Publisher
