

English-Chinese Dictionary of International Trade & Commodity

With some 3 million characters, this dictionary has nearly 50,000 entries covering a wide range of categories. It includes the majority of commodity categories involved in import and export trade. The categories are listed by the subject (modifier is put behind); commodity specifications are given according to international trade standards; and for a specific commodity, its similarities with and differences from others are clearly described. The entries unique to China such as the pills, powder, extracts and pellets of traditional Chinese medicine are helpful to the export of such products.
